Description

Valencia's abstract and improvisational embroidery completely obscures the striped fabric underneath. This commercial machine-woven textile may have originally served as a tablecloth in the Valencia home. Along one border, Valencia stitched the phrase "sobremesa antigua," meaning literally "old tablecloth." However, "sobremesa" is also an idiomatic phrase that can refer to "delightful conversation," as one enjoys while sitting around a dinner table with friends and family after a shared meal. The juxtaposition of meanings in his inscription "sobremesa antigua," implying "old delightful conversation," reflects Valencia's love of wordplay, but it could also be understood as a commentary on changing norms. In his embroidered messages, Valencia often describes his intention to record for "future memory" elements of cultural life fast disappearing. He also warns against vices, like envy and ambition, that could lead to social disharmony. Transcription: April 2, 1925, I started putting white thread on this blanket on which you will see a certain collection of animals, some of which are already rare for our times and others which [still] exist now for domestic use, but I have pictured those animals here to be remembered. Those [animals] that served mankind in the past were the buffalo, the horse, the donkey, the mule and the ox, the sheep and goat, the bison (with its meat that sustained the people). The donkey the mule, carrying loads of commercial goods on its back to trade, traveling over long distances and over mountains. They were mishandled or mistreated with a whip. The ox pulling in front with a pole tied to its horns. This was a yoke. Two [oxen] were bound to the yoke, and they were driven with a cattle prod. This was a pointed stick. The man on his horse, with his courage and a lance in his hand, made use of the buffalo. And the sheep and the goat, with their hair and hide, they would clothe their masters, and, with their meat and milk, fed the people. August 20, 1925, these blue letters give you the names of animals depicted on this blanket. By paying close attention, you will find bison, bears, wolves, deer, pronghorn, lion, birds, camel, pig, coyotes, foxes, skunks, cattle, oxen, calves, donkeys, mule hybrid, sheep, and goats.
